THE EDITO

By Alain Bouillé

Alain Bouille has been the Director of Information Systems Security for the Caisse des Dépôts Group since 2001. He is a member of CLUSIF, the R2GS club, CIGREF and the Cercle Européen de la Sécurité. Since July 2012, he has chaired the Club des Experts de la Sécurité de l'Information et du Numérique (CESIN), which brings together nearly 150 CISOs from large companies.

The CESIN's (French computer and digital security experts club) yearly barometer: decreasing cyberattacks but ever present cyberthreats

With its yearly barometer, the CESIN has been attempting for the last eight years to extricate itself from the anxiety-inducing statistics based on the exponential increase of attacks and millions of euros extorted from victims. No one at the CESIN is in denial of the very real cyberthreats and virulence of attacks, especially when they are successful.

DIGITAL SOVEREIGNTY

Cloud services certification: a hard road to harmonisation

By Marc Auxenfans

In a fragmented market dominated by American service providers, ENISA is trying to establish a common certification scheme called the European Cybersecurity Certification Scheme for Cloud Services (EUCS). The aim is to achieve a high level of expertise and quality of service in cybersecurity. However, the suggested sovereignty and security requirements are considered unacceptable by some Member States.
